"I MEAN DAN."

The Besprente Condition of the Horseman Who Had to Talk Plain.

They were both owners of livery stables, and were dining together at a Seventh avenue restaurant. One was tall, with lots of bony pegs all over him, and the other was as plump and tence of skin as a boiled sausage. Both had the mot-led red faces of much exposure, and as they chatted each tried to see who could keep furthest in the shadow of technical horse talk, and he secored a point who forced the other from the oundabout to the direct, thus: Have ye shtill the big sorrel?"

D'ye mane the mare?"
No. I mane the horse. The big sorrel that in Belancy wanted of ye."
You'll be maning the wan of the pair?"
No. cos he had tree white stockings, and vil a match you'll get for thim in a hurry."
I hav a sorrel with three white stockings do a star." and a star."
That'll be the wan you bought of old man "The same, but shure he's not very big—excipt in the barri, bad inck to him."
The's not him. I mane the big sorrel that should his had last spring."
"Bain't you thinking of the long-jawed bay that goes in D. McNeil's surrey—him that I pit ograss?"
I mane. I was a spring.

"I mane I mane Dan."
"Oh, Dan; oh, shure I have him shtill."

That Enabled Him to Put His Hand on His Money When He Wanted It. Two men got on a Third avenue cable car in Park row and the car smelled at once like the mash vard of a browery. One was voluble and the other said no word and was rigid about the eyes. The conductor asked for the fares and the talkative man said: "Why shert'nly, the talkative man same short process of the trousers and said:
"Trouble wish a man is, takes shree weeks to hunt for his coin. Oh, got heapsh, slashin's some ere." Then he twisted his right hand into his hip pocket and his left hand into his coat breast pocket. "Plenty of it, ole man, fish can only find it." he went on, "can borrow eight shousan' in Albany any day like to go there." Then he pulled his waistcoat pockets inside out.

"Got ninety-sicksh dollars some'ere" he said, "and lotsh more where that c'mfrom.
Bay, Bill, wottinell I do wish all my money?"
Then Bill turned his horny looking eyes on his friend and took off his hat with a very wooden hand and arm. And in the hat was a mass of notes and silver that would have made a rich handful.
"Tell you." said the talkative man, stirring the meas around for a dime. "always carry m'
money in Bill'ah has, then I his alwaysh tell

Grandmother Hoobier's 100 Years.

From the Cracinsati Enguirer.

In the eastern part of Harrison county, O., in German township, on a fine farm (the home farm), lives David Hoobier, and with him resides his mother, Catharine Hoobier, who on Oct. 8, celebrated her 100th birthday, there being present upward of 1,000 relatives, friends, and neighbors.

Grandmother Hoobier, née Catherine Shuits, was born at Harper's Ferry, Va., and her father was in the Hevolutionary army. In 1803, when 11 years old, with her parents she came to Ohio, with the rest walking all the way, and they located in this county, which was almost a wilderness, and the city of Steubenville, a small derness, and the city of Steubenville, a small derness, and the city of Steubenville, a small their lives, and together worked the farm.

She has reaped in the field, shorn sheep, and carried the wool forward in every stage until it was cloth and made into garments. She now has a rich store of rare linen, which she produced in every stage from planting the fax. She was the mother of ten children four girls and six boys—six of whom are living. Her husband has been dead twenty-three years.

Grandmother Hoobler is a remarkably preserved and active old lady, and is perfectly possessed of her mental faculties, being well posted on all events of the century up to date. She today contrasts the condition of affairs to those of ninety years ago, when there was no market for produce and calico was 50 cents per yeard, Just the price of a week's spinning.

She was always a home woman, and although living but three miles from the Ponnayivania Raliroad she has never seen a train of cars and never heard a brass bant play until two years ago, when her minety-eighth birthday was celebrated.
